1. Intrepid Group Animal Welfare and Wildlife Position

We actively discourage the participation of Intrepid Group passengers in activities that exploit animals be that wild, domestic or working animals.

2. Purpose of this Policy

To provide practical guidelines for:

- Staff and leaders designing trips or managing requests for experiences which involve wild or domestic and working animals.
- Distinguishing between wild and domestic/working animals and outlining how interactions with each are different.
- Guiding leaders and others in their assessment of the health, safety and best management of domestic and working animals during the course of Intrepid Group tours including optional and included activities, transport on animals, photography and food

3. Animal Welfare Basics

Animal welfare concerns the health of the animal's body and mental state. The following five universally accepted pillars of animal welfare have been considered in forming this policy:

- Freedom from hunger and thirst
- Freedom from discomfort

Intrepid Group

- Freedom from pain, injury or disease
- Freedom to express normal behaviour
- Freedom from fear and distress

Although these 5 freedoms should be afforded to all animals, The Intrepid Group also recognizes that there is a difference between wild and domestic animals.

Domestic/working animals are animals such as dogs or horses that have been kept, tamed and have undergone selective breeding over many generations to be notably and genetically different to their wild ancestors. This process has not happened for wild animals such as elephants, tigers and monkeys kept for tourism purposes – they remain wild.

The Intrepid Group accepts that the welfare of wild animals is compromised in captivity and captivity is only acceptable when it is in the animal's best interests and the highest possible standards of care are given. (see Section 6).

4. Riding Animals

The Intrepid Group believes domestic / working animals such as horses, donkeys and camels encountered on our tours should have a decent life, where they are properly cared for, they enjoy the Five Freedoms and positive aspects of their existence outweigh the negative.

As a general guide for domestic/working animals:

- The animals should look well fed
- Their coats should be in good condition without sores (check near the mouth, shoulders, spine and belly, these areas are typically in constant contact with harnessing equipment). Wounds may also be hidden under a saddle or harness. (Should be noted that it is not ever acceptable to use wild animals for riding.)
- The animals eyes should be clear, bright and alert
- Handlers should not use physical force (including hitting or beating with crops, sticks or hands) to control or manoeuvre the animal
- ensure that passengers do not feed the animals

a. Elephant Rides: Not a part of our itineraries

The Intrepid Group supported an extensive research project concerning the welfare of captive elephants, conducted by World Animal Protection. As a result of this research, the Intrepid Group does not offer elephant rides as part of included or optional activities.

As a staff member or leader you are not expected to stop travellers from doing what they insist on doing, however it is expected that you inform them as to why we do not recommend or endorse elephant rides (or rides on any wild animal).

Reasons we don't endorse or offer elephant rides:

- Elephants are NOT domesticated
- Because all captive elephants are not domesticated animals, for them to be kept in captivity:
 - They often need to be restrained.
 - They are vulnerable to sudden outbursts of human targeted aggression, leading to injuries and fatalities.
- In order to be trained, all undergo a cruel, painful and intense process to break the elephants will and accept human control.
- They are susceptible to the development of health and behavioural problems.
- Bull hooks are used (by the handlers) to maintain control of the elephant. These can cause serious injuries to the elephants including infected sores and cuts.

b. Riding Donkeys and Camels

Donkeys and camels are considered domestic or working animals. These are the only animal rides that are offered as an included activity and only offered in the itinerary where the wellbeing of animals has been previously established. Tour leaders have a right (and obligation) to refuse service if animals are in poor condition. General things to look out for:

- When riding, donkeys or camels during our trips helmets are generally not available to travellers. (Please refer to our Health and Safety policy) We therefore need to ensure that only slow moving and even tempered animals are provided by the operator.
- Riders should choose an animal that is appropriate to their size.
- Animals should not carry more than half their body weight and less during extreme heat or on steep declines. If extreme temperatures are experienced animals should not be ridden.
- Are the animals healthy? As a leader you are responsible for alerting your Operations Manager if you believe that the animals are not being well cared for. Some of the things to consider in your assessment are:

Camels:

- Their coats should be in good condition without sores (check near the mouth, shoulders, spine and belly, these areas are typically in constant contact with harnessing equipment) Wounds may also be hidden under a saddle or harness.

Intrepid Group

- Handlers should not use physical force (including hitting with crops, sticks or hands) to control or manoeuvre the animal
- Ensure that passengers do not feed the animals

*There is a species of camel (the Wild Bactrian Camel - Camelus ferus) which is not a domesticated species. This species are not used for rides or close encounters with people.*

Donkeys/Mules:

- Check the donkey over to see that it hasn't been subjected to 'firing'. This means burning with red hot metal to various parts of a donkey's body, most often the legs. The practitioners believe this 'traditional healing' method will make the animal 'strong'.
- Never overload a horse drawn carriage - walk away
- Never canter or gallop the donkey drawn carriage
- Never ride more than one on the back of donkey
- Consider your own weight before riding and aim to choose an animal appropriate to your size and weight.
- If the owner is treating the animal badly, ie excessive whipping, stop and find an alternative driver.
- Ensure you pay a fair price for the ride to ensure that the owner can feed and properly look after the animal.
- Praise owners whose animals are in good condition and who are well rode.
- An appropriate weight for a donkey to carry is on average 120kgs – smaller donkeys should take on less.

c. Horse Riding

Horse-riding is considered a technical activity and because of the greater speed of the animal and are not included in our itineraries. Horse riding requires an Activity Risk Assessment to be completed and signed off before it is considered.

Before riding consider the health of the horse:

- Riders should choose an animal that is appropriate to their size.
- Horses should not carry more than half their body weight and less during extreme heat or on steep declines. If extreme temperature are encountered, animals should not be ridden.
- Are the animals healthy? As with donkeys and camels, you are responsible for alerting your Operations Manager if you believe that the animals are not being well cared for.

- Is the horse underweight? Horses which are underweight should not be ridden. An underweight horse can be identified by protruding or visible ribs, hip bones or spine.
- The horse's eyes should be clean, bright and alert.

5. Viewing Wildlife in the Wild

As Intrepid believes wild animals should be viewed in the wild, the following code has been prepared with the best interests of wildlife and the safety of our staff and travellers.

- Respect the 'personal space' of the wildlife, this is their habitat. If a visitor/vehicle causes an animal to alter its behaviour, then the visitor has invaded its space and influenced its normal behaviour. Observe nature as it occurs naturally and not as to how it responds to your presence there. Stress is harmful to animals.
- Speak quietly - do not call out, whistle or in other ways try and attract the attention of animals. Noise disturbs them and may antagonise fellow visitors. Avoid sudden movements.
- Beware of the animals, they are wild and can be unpredictable. Do not get too close. Remember that if an animal charges you, it may be feeling threatened because it doesn't have sufficient space.
- Don't feed animals or birds. Habituating them to humans and to human food upsets their natural diet, can shorten their life and cause trouble for other people later on by making the animals unnaturally aggressive.
- Do not touch wild animals, as you can unwittingly pass on diseases to wildlife, as well as placing yourself at risk. This includes sea life.
- Insect repellents and sun-cream (which tourist often have on their hands /body) can cause irritation/damage to the skin of reptiles and amphibians.
- When in a safari environment, stay in your vehicle at all times as predators may be present, except at designated picnic or camping areas and walking/bushwalking tracks.
- Leave no litter, including food scraps and cigarette butts.
- Night viewing: Minimise usage of a flashlight and never shine your light into an animals' eyes. Do not illuminate prey as this gives the predator an unfair advantage.
- Avoid marine parks or aquariums that keep large mammals' such as dolphins captive as they are often taken from the wild and their confinement is both physically and psychologically cruel.

- Avoid lion walks as these animals are often taken from their mothers prematurely and kept in conditions that do not meet their needs. Venues will sometimes sell the lions on to commercial hunting operations once they become unable to be controlled.
- You may be offered options to visit wild animals that have been habituated or in animal orphanages. Ask your the operator or the attraction if any of the animals kept have been taken from the wild, as this places additional pressure on wild species. Ask if there is an active education programme at the attraction, as responsible attractions provide this. A genuine wildlife orphanage will not allow the tourist to hold/touch/ride the wild animals. Do not give business to exploitive operators.

Drivers/guides are instructed in the following (and you must not ask them to do otherwise):

- Keep below the maximum speed limit. In most National Parks this is 40kph/25 mph.
- Never drive off the road (in National Parks). This can severely damage animal habitat.
- In a reserve that allows off-road driving, the guide needs to be aware of and adhere to where they can and cannot drive. This refers to the type of soil and vegetation of the area.
- When viewing wildlife, keep to a minimum distance of 20 meters and pull to the side of the road so that others can pass. The number of vehicles at a sighting should be controlled whenever possible - being sensitive to other visitors' viewing and not crowding in an animal on the move.
- When a pride of lions or a leopard is hunting, and they stop to listen or to smell the air, switch off your vehicle and keep your guests quiet.
- Never cut an animal off. Remember they have the right of way in their environment. If an animal has to change direction because of your vehicle, you are interfering.
- Never use your vehicle to get an animal to move. Try to anticipate what the animal is going to do and position your vehicle accordingly.
- In some parks, night game driving is not allowed and you must make camp or leave the park before dusk.

6. Sanctuaries for Wildlife

Intrepid Group should only visit facilities involving wild animals in captivity if the rationale for the sanctuary operation is in the best interests of the animals involved

Intrepid Group

(i.e. only visiting animal sanctuaries, marine sanctuaries and/or rescue centres operating with the highest animal welfare and conservation standards possible).

Genuine sanctuaries;

- do not buy/sell wild animals
- do not use the animals for interactions with travellers or in performances/shows
- do not breed wild animals – unless they are part of an official recognised breeding programme in which the animals involved are being responsibly released back in to the wild.

Sanctuaries should also be keeping the animals in conditions that meet their species specific needs with appropriate veterinary care.

Activities such as walking with the lions and petting wildlife are not permitted on Intrepid Group trips.

7. Animal products

In most local markets passengers can find wild animal products, especially anything from an endangered species – such as;

- skins such as reptile skin and furs
- horns eg. rhino
- spiders and butterflies
- turtle shell
- sea shells, coral, starfish
- ivory
- traditional medicines made from endangered animal parts and products

This trade is generally illegal but may not be enforced through relevant government agencies. It is important to discourage travellers from purchasing such items as they are fuelling an illegal trade. The wild animals used to produce these products often suffer significantly and at every stage of the process. Suffering is likely to occur regardless of if the animal has been bred in captivity/wild sourced or if the process is legal/illegal.

This also extends to food products such as Turtle Soup, Shark Fin soup and Snake whiskeys. We would advise against travellers purchasing 'medicinal' products that are made from wild animal derivatives, such as bear bile, tiger wine, lion bone wine which can also fuel wildlife farming and illegal wildlife trade.

8. Animal photography

You may find that local people have taken animals from the wild so tourists can pay and have their photos taken with the animal. Please alert your group to the possibility of this and advise them NOT to participate in this activity. It is not known how these animals are treated, (Are they drugged? Are they fed correctly? Are they kept in inadequate conditions).

Discourage people from visiting venues that offer animal shows, 'selfies' or direct interaction with wild animals. The animals involved in these activities are sometimes taken from the wild, often bred in intensive conditions, usually taken prematurely from their mothers as babies, and undergo cruel physical and psychological conditioning to make them compliant and perform. Visiting these venues perpetuates a cycle of animal cruelty.

9. Other Unacceptable practices involving animals

Please ensure that Intrepid Group passengers DO NOT visit or engage in any of the following exploitative activities:

- Venues (this includes marine) that have unnatural animal performances such as elephant polo and dolphin/seal performances
- Animals used for begging such as dancing bears, snake charmers or buying bananas for elephants and monkeys etc
- Canned or trophy hunting of lions and other wildlife
- Ostrich riding
- Bull fighting
- Cockfighting
- Swimming with dolphins and among seal colonies
- Shark or crocodile cage diving where baiting of any kind is used
- Restaurants or hotels that display captive wildlife

Any questions or concerns?

If you are still unsure whether the facility has a high standard of care for its animals or have any other questions on animal welfare, please contact us at responsible.business@intrepidgroup.travel for further guidance.

If you have concerns about a particular supplier we use, use your Trip Report to alert your Operations Manager and other leaders
